

A lot goes into Old No. 49 Farmhouse Ale: bright, citrusy, fruity hops, a wild yeast and the perfect blend of barley, wheat and rye. It brings up feelings of fresh cut hay, 100 year old boards, the earth's kiss of upturned dirt and first morning light. The satisfaction of being exhausted, of being empty and full at the same time. The fruits of your labor.

The dream again. You walk naked through a thicket of fresh hydrangea. In the clearing ahead, a copper-colored fox stands upright, holding an orange and a cluster of coriander in his paws. You go to him. He crushes the orange, the coriander, smears the juice on your lips. "Dig," he commands. You claw the earth until you hit something hard and cold—a can of Johnny Wit. You look up in awe. The fox is gone. You are god of this forest now.

Trip your tastebuds out with COLUMBUS and FUGGLE HOPS mixed with a creamy array of malts. Notes of COFFEE, COCOA, and VANILLA BEAN really tie the room together. But that's just, like, our opinion, man.

Before Europeans set foot on this continent, ancient forces ruled the land. Mayan gods—the Lords of the Night—created and destroyed as they pleased. So cover yourself in soot. Paint your face in gold. Prepare to worship. Part beer, part coffee, this brew is imbued with Azacca and El Dorado hops. It's basically like drinking a jaguar's blood. With the sun in one hand and the moon in the other, make the night your kingdom.
